TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

For over twenty-five years, I have worked as art director, graphic artist, writer, web designer and developer on the staff of several newspapers, magazines, and the largest defense contractor in the country. Additionally and sometimes simultaneously, I worked as advertising director and project manager for various non-profit organizations, online periodicals, and my own web development firm. Prior to that, I was a certified paralegal working in Mississippi criminal defense, family law and Louisiana mass tort litigation.

These days, I live in a historic home that I blog about (sadiesoldhouse.com) in Coldwater, Mississippi, a suburb of Memphis, Tennessee. From a carriage house in our backyard, I run my art studio, Moosh Print Studio, (mooshprint.com) and my limited-client web firm, Jaded Artist Media, (jadedartist.com).

Since 2020, I have volunteered for Memphis/Germantown Art League, serving on the board of directors, and maintaining the marketing and organization website (that I developed at mgal.org). In 2016, I founded NASTY WOMEN Memphis, an art activism organization where I produced and curated four very large art exhibits (showing over 100 artists and raising over $10,000 for our charity), while also maintaining the marketing and organization website (that I developed at nastywomenmemphis.com).

While most of the formal education of my youth was focused on history and law, I have taken decades of courses in art, commercial design and web scripting languages and have built more websites and brands than I can even recall. In short, I am fully capable of single-handedly producing a brand with supporting content, printed materials, web (digital, video) media, and social media promotion, from beginning to end. I am also a fiercely independent workaholic.

I would love to hear about your project and hope we can work together. Thanking you in advance for your careful consideration, I remain,

Sincerely,

CHELLE ELLIS
